Jane G. Taylor
Sr. Architect

Jane has been with the California Building Standards Commission (CBSC) since August 2004. Appointed Senior Architect in July of 2007, she leads the CBSC technical team that supports the commission in its adoption of the building codes for the State of California.

Over the last five years, Jane has worked with CBSC staff and other state agencies in the development and adoption of California's Green Building Standards Code (CALGreen), the first of its kind in the nation. She is currently working on the 2012 updates.

Prior to joining the commission staff, Jane returned to school after thirteen years of state service and received her BA in Architecture from California State Polytechnic University, Pomona, in 1985. She worked for almost twenty years in the private sector as a licensed architect on such projects as public schools, commercial and municipal buildings, and affordable housing.

When not in the office, Jane enjoys exercise, gardening, and travel and; as often as she can, combines these activities with bird watching.
