Subject: REQUEST FOR EMERGENCY FORM 42 WAIVER

Hi Marty,

Per our conversation, the DOJ is requesting an emergency Form 42 waiver for the products listed in the attached Dell Quote.

Background: The Information Technology Contracts and Procurement Unit (ITCPU) received a Purchase Requisition Form on March 30, 2015, from our DNA Laboratory in Richmond to purchase the Storage Area Network (SAN) equipment listed in the attached quote to upgrade our existing SAN environment. Existing SAN has reached its end of life cycle and can no longer support the growing amount of electronic data being generated by various programs.

It was ITCPU's intent to purchase the equipment via five different mandatory contracts, and we are in the process of obtaining offers and working with the various contract vendors on "off spec" equipment. Once that process is complete, we would still need to get DGS approval to purchase the off-spec items. However, our customer has requested an emergency purchase.

Prior to this purchase becoming an emergency, the plan was to separate the equipment into the following purchase orders:

Description	Vendor	State Contract
Dell Servers	TIG	SC 1-09-70-03C
Brocade Switches	Kovarus	SC 1-13-70-14A
Dell Storage	TIG	SC 1-13-70-10A
Dell Tape Libraries	TIG	SC 1-13-70-13
Dell Tape Library Consumables	Dell	WSCA B27160

Justification for Emergency Purchase:

Electrical maintenance was performed on our primary laboratory building on April 25th. The property management company did not appropriately shut down the building Uninterruptible Power Supply (UPS) prior to allowing PG&E to power things down. The necessary maintenance was performed and, when power was restored, the UPS came back up in internal bypass mode. The property management's engineer assessed the situation and gave the go ahead for our IT staff to begin bringing up our equipment. An hour+ in, the building UPS dropped the electrical load, and all of our equipment (but for one server not yet powered up) went dark. Network and servers were not ultimately restored until the following day.

On Tuesday April 28th we suffered the failure of three hard drives of enclosure 0 of the primary SAN. Unbeknownst to us at the time, the storage processor had been damaged and control of SAN was flipping back and forth between the two controller servers, with our normal real-time replication to the backup SAN in the other building compromised. Replacement drives were ordered, and at that time we were told such drives are limited. A fourth one failed on Wednesday April 29th. We shut down the SAN on Friday May 1st to replace the storage processor, at which time the full extent of the problem became apparent. The primary and backup SAN are now out of sync and we have lost data from the primary system, which remains unstable and suffered two more drive failures today (for a total of six of 12 in that enclosure). We will be transitioning to the backup SAN this week, at which point we no longer have any system redundancy. Once we are on the backup SAN we no longer have disk-to-disk replication and the tape backups normally start Friday afternoon and don't conclude until Tuesday, so we have a bottleneck there. We run the risk of losing days' worth of work or having data we need access to for day-to-day operations be inaccessible.

The SAN houses four network drives that serve the following:

- 1) Mission-critical DNA profile data (genetic analyzer files) from both convicted offenders and felony arrestees, including archives of previously analyzed data back to 2007.
- 2) The network backup for work on staff C; drives
- 3) Contains all other shared files, including technical procedures in editing, scheduling information, operational information and administrative files, etc.
- 4) Contained IT-Specific information, including network applications and electronic downloads of software, installation files, etc. This drive is currently corrupted and not retrievable.

It is urgent that we purchase this equipment ASAP. The coordination with all of the above contracts/vendors, processing of multiple purchase orders at year-end adds additional time that we can't risk. Please consider this request. Call me if you need further information.

Hi Bernie,

Here is a copy of the Std 65 for your review and approval. Per our discussion, Dell can provide all the products and extended warranty on their WSCA Contract B27160, therefore, we checked the "Leveraged" box as the Procurement Method, along with the "Exempt" box since we are using the Form 42 emergency process.

As previously mentioned, we were originally planning to use various statewide contracts to procure the items. We have received some of the quotes, but due to the emergency have not been able to vet them. I can send you those if you would like.

Diane,

I am forwarding your emergency request to Intake Analysis Unit (IAU) so that it can be logged in our database and start the process. For future reference, please submit your requests, including emergency requests, to iau@dgs.ca.gov

Per our conference call this morning, please provide the following:

1. Purchase Order showing all equipment needed to be purchased. The PO should include the terms of any warranty, training, service level agreement and any other requirements needed with this purchase. You may want to contact the supplier(s) and ask if they will give you WSCA or State Contract pricing for this purchase and also offer all of the WSCA / State contracting warranty and service.
2. If applicable, provide two quotes that reflect all the equipment you need to purchase. If only one quote can be obtained, please explain why.

Justification for Emergency Purchase:

Electrical maintenance was performed on our primary laboratory building on April 25th. The property management company did not appropriately shut down the building Uninterruptible Power Supply (UPS) prior to allowing PG&E to power things down. The necessary maintenance was performed and, when power was restored, the UPS came back up in internal bypass mode. The property management's engineer assessed the situation and gave the go ahead for our IT staff to begin bringing up our equipment. An hour+ in, the building UPS dropped the electrical load, and all of our equipment (but for one server not yet powered up) went dark. Network and servers were not ultimately restored until the following day.

On Tuesday April 28th we suffered the failure of three hard drives of enclosure 0 of the primary SAN. Unbeknownst to us at the time, the storage processor had been damaged and control of SAN was flipping back and forth between the two controller servers, with our normal real-time replication to the backup SAN in the other building compromised. Replacement drives were ordered, and at that time we were told such drives are limited. A fourth one failed on Wednesday April 29th. We shut down the SAN on Friday May 1st to replace the storage processor, at which time the full extent of the problem became apparent. The primary and backup SAN are now out of sync and we have lost data from the primary system, which remains unstable and suffered two more drive failures today (for a total of six of 12 in that enclosure). We will be transitioning to the backup SAN this week, at which point we no longer have any system redundancy. Once we are on the backup SAN we no longer have disk-to-disk replication and the tape backups normally start Friday afternoon and don't conclude until Tuesday, so we have a bottleneck there. We run the risk of losing days' worth of work or having data we need access to for day-to-day operations be inaccessible.

The SAN houses four network drives that serve the following:

- 1) Mission-critical DNA profile data (genetic analyzer files) from both convicted offenders and felony arrestees, including archives of previously analyzed data back to 2007.
- 2) The network backup for work on staff C; drives
- 3) Contains all other shared files, including technical procedures in editing, scheduling information, operational information and administrative files, etc.
- 4) Contained IT-Specific information, including network applications and electronic downloads of software, installation files, etc. This drive is currently corrupted and not retrievable.

It is urgent that we purchase this equipment ASAP. The coordination with all of the above contracts/vendors, processing of multiple purchase orders at year-end adds additional time that we can't risk. Please consider this request. Call me if you need further information.
